Thanks and Regards,

SHRUTI ARORA,
PRESIDENT
CEE
The rich diversity of today's society is clearly evident in many classrooms, which is no longer enough to educate some of our children in the current state of Education system. Schools and learning environments must work for all and must reflect the cultures of the communities they serve.

In a society, historical and on-going conditions related to social labeling create people's race, sex/gender, social class, age, disability, etc., profoundly shape how others and they perceive themselves and their world. Schools offer society a unique opportunity to influence positive values and relationships at school and beyond. This can result from what is taught, how it is taught, and through interactions which students have with each other and with school staff.

In schools and higher education settings, teachers and staff can help to facilitate positive intergroup relationships through cooperative learning activities. Research on cooperative learning indicates that it not only promotes better academic achievement; but it also improve peer relations. When a diverse group of students are involved in learning cooperatively, improved relations are reported from different racial/ethnic, gender, language proficiency, and economic backgrounds. In terms of curricular content to facilitate positive intergroup relations, the emphasis is on multicultural education i.e., respect for cultural differences (e.g., diverse histories, values, socio-cultural practices and behaviours, ways of learning) etc. Multicultural education is becoming an essential facet of a school's curriculum in the age of globalization. It can also play a key role in promoting a healthy and safe school environment. It can be included as a formal unit or as a part of activities. All efforts to facilitate positive intergroup interactions will benefit from having a diverse staff in all personnel categories.

Diversity in Indian Institutions is both an opportunity and a challenge. The nation is enriched by the ethnic, cultural, and language diversity among its citizens and within its Institutions. However, whenever diverse groups interact, intergroup tension develops. Thus institutes must find ways to respect the diversity of their students as well as help to create a unified nation-state to which all of the nation’s citizens have allegiance.

Confederation of Education Excellence (CEE) always had a strong focus to bring multicultural international experience to bring Quality in Education and we continue to learn much from our communication with other countries and the different cultures within our own. We hope these drafted design principles will help educational policy makers and practitioners, though they may realize this elusive and difficult but essential goal of a democratic and pluralistic society.

To understand the drafted policies and principles CEE has organized an International Conference on Multicultural Education in Indian Education System on 6th October 2018 at USI Delhi. We extend this invite to the Honorable dignitaries of all the ministries and Intellectuals from Institutions to be the part of the same.
